This is the first complete story of the awful catastrophe published, and furnishes a highly interesting history which should be kept for future reference by everybody. It is the very thing to send to absent friends. In addition, there is a complement of miscellaneous matter, general and local news, making this number of THE WEEKLY STAR one of unusual interest. The Late Wm. H. Bland.

By the death of Mr. Wm. H. Bland at his residence, 700 E street southeast, last Sunday night, East Washington looses one of its oldest and most respected citizens. Mr. Bland was born in Virginia, in September, 1809, and consequently was nearly eighty years of age. His father was a well-known Episcopal minister, after whom Bland county, Va., was named. At the age of sixteen the deceased obtained an ap-prenticeship in the iron foundry of the U. S. navy-yard in this city and became foreman in charge, where he remained continuously until a short time before his last illness, with the exception of four years, during the administration of Jas. Buchanan, when he was removed for political reasons. During that time he was oreman of the iron foundry of Morris, Tasker

& Co., Philadelphia, then the largest iron workers in the United States. Soon after the inauguration of Mr. Lincoln he was again placed in his old position and rendered valuable service to the government, running the foundry day and night during the war, casting shot and shell which were sent to our war vessels all over the country. The excellence of the ammunition made at the Washington navyyard has been attested to by both Federal and confederate officers. Fifty-eight years of Mr. Bland's life were spent in the service of the government. He was the oldest member in years of the old 4th street M. E. church and the years of the old 4th street M. E. church and the oldest in continuous membership, a regular at-tendant and faithful in all church duties, His death was peaceful, in keeping with his quiet and unobtrusive life. FIRST LIEUT. L. J. corps, now on the Mohican, has been condemned by a medical survey and ordered to the naval hospital at New York for treatment.

Of course, there is at present no way of determining with any degree ent, which makes it severe for those with little of exactitude how many are dead, but the guess-ing is reasonable and conservative and based on close figuring. Mr. Ranney to this place, worn out and broken-hearted. To a correspondent he said: "Mrs. Ranney and I were respondent he said: "Mrs. Ranney and I were on the train at Conemaugh when the came. The occupants of our car rushed for the door, where Mrs. Ranney and I became separated. She was one of the first to jump, and I saw her run and disappear behind the first houses in sight. Before I could get out the deluge was too high, and with a number of others I remained in the car. Our car was lifted up and dashed against one loaded with stone and was badly wrecked, but most of the occupants were saved. As far as I know all who jumped from the car lost their lives. The rest of the train was swept away. I searched for days for Mrs. Ranney and could find no trace of her. I think she perished. The mind cannot conceive the awful sight presented when we first saw the danger. The approaching wall of water looked like Niagara, and huge engines were caught up and whirled away as if they were wheelbarrows."
